“ Garren and I met online when we were 22. We shared many of the same struggles, passions, interests, epiphanies, downfalls and hope. Even though for the first 5 or 6 years of our friendship we hadn't met face to face yet, I always felt that I had someone, a confident, that I could show my real self too. Someone that didn't judge me. A fellow artist's soul that knew what deep longing, and love and lose was all about. Our lives ran parallel for over a decade until we grew apart and we only occasionally said hello. Yet I still always thought of him and hoped he would come out on top and be OK. Garren was a beautiful person and I will forever hold our memories dear. He helped me feel connected in times of complete desolation. I will always be thankful for the beauty he gave to me in my times of need.

“ No no no no no this is not true!!!! I'm shocked and numb. If you looked beneath some of the battles he was fighting, he was the most honest, sweet, caring, truthful and loyal person I've known

Alex Alba - January 31, 2021 at 08:27 PM

Yes, he was...

Melissa Boyer - February 01, 2021 at 02:32 PM

BI

He was the most caring, kind, and damn near flawless human being I've ever met in my life. He didn't deserve this. He didnt deserve anything he was going through at all.
